Homemade soup

Happy Monday!

I hope this past week has gone well for you. My week ended up being very different than I expected! On Monday I began to have cold-like symptoms. On Tuesday I had a high fever and found out that I had the flu. I have spent the week resting and hydrating. Being sick can be an isolating thing, but while I have been alone physically, I have felt such love and care from my community here. I received daily messages asking how I was feeling and if I needed anything. I was blessed with homemade soup and pasta, juice, medicine, oranges, etc. So many have been so kind and generous and my heart is very thankful. God is good! Please pray for my continued recovery. I have been fever free for a couple days now and am definitely improving but am not quite at 100% yet.

Perspectives Zoom meeting

Example of all of the liquids that I have been consuming this week

I am very honored that my home sending church has reached out to me to have a live zoom call tomorrow during the church services. I will share some pictures and talk a bit about life and ministry here in Spain. If you would like to watch the live stream you can do so at this link: <https://live.restonbible.org/> Lord willing, I will be sharing at both the 9:00 and the 10:45 services. If you are interested in seeing the call but are unable to watch the live stream, please let me know and I can email you a recording. :-)
